FOREIGN TRAVEL

Traveling to foreign destinations can present health hazards. Those hazards may be unique to the destination or common to most. An individual's health may also impact the risk of foreign travel. The University of Illinois at Chicago School of Public Health Travelers Health and Immunization Service evaluates travelers, their destinations and related issues to prepare them for foreign travel. The Service also provides after-trip assessments and treatment recommendations for those returning with travel-related exposures and/or illnesses.

Whether traveling for business, recreation or academic enrichment, the Travelers Service can provide necessary health services for a successful and enjoyable trip.

Katherine Duvall MD, MPH, is the director of the Travelers Health and Immunization Service. She is on the faculty of the School of Public Health and board-certified in Occupational Medicine. She and her staff provide customized immunization and preventive medical treatment plans to those who plan to travel throughout the world.
